seminar paper from the year 2020 in the subject philosophy philosophy of the present grade 1 0 bielefeld university abteilung philosophie course konstruieren wir emotionen language english abstract the focus of this paper will lie on the relationship between affect and rationality as described by barrett more specifically i am going to discuss whether it is plausible to believe that affect subjugates rationality my goal is to show that it indeed is credible to believe that there is necessarily a dependency between affect and rationality to argue for this i will proceed as follows first i will give an overview on barrett s emotion theory in chapter two then i will concentrate on the term affect in chapter three i will dis cuss what affect means where barrett places it in her theory and what consequences we may derive from it for these two parts i will focus on the fourth chapter the origin of feeling of her book how emotions are made 2018 because she outlines the main idea of her proposal here accordingly the first part of this paper is mainly reconstructive and about identifying the underlying beliefs that lead barrett to her assumptions outlining the consequences of affect will lead over to the critical approach to barrett s claims in this step i will explain why and how affect s consequences connect to a person s capability of rationality to discuss the plausibility of the made assumptions i will attend to the model homo economicus in chapter four and five thereby i will focus on the definition s of rationality used in connection with this model and discuss the model in context with barrett s theory i chose homo economicus because barrett herself argues against it i am also interested in examining homo economicus because i want to know whether barrett is justified in rejecting the model finally i will draw a conclusion based on the acquired information in this paper in chapter six in this conclusion i will elaborate whether i was successful in arguing for the plausibility of a necessary dependency between affect and rationality in from molecule to metaphor jerome feldman proposes a theory of language and thought that treats language not as an abstract symbol system but as a human biological ability that can be studied as a function of the brain as vision and motor control are studied this theory he writes is a bridging theory that works from extensive knowledge at two ends of a causal chain to explicate the links between although the cognitive sciences are revealing much about how our brains produce language and thought we do not yet know exactly how words are understood or have any methodology for finding out feldman develops his theory in computer simulations formal models that suggest ways that language and thought may be realized in the brain combining key findings and theories from biology computer science linguistics and psychology feldman synthesizes a theory by exhibiting programs that demonstrate the required behavior while remaining consistent with the findings from all disciplines after presenting the essential results on language learning neural computation the biology of neurons and neural circuits and the mind brain feldman introduces specific demonstrations and formal models of such topics as how children learn their first words words for abstract and metaphorical concepts understanding stories and grammar including hot button issues surrounding the innateness of human grammar with this accessible comprehensive book feldman offers readers who want to understand how our brains create thought and language a theory of language that is intuitively plausible and also consistent with existing scientific data at all levels according to an ancient and still popular view sometimes known as eudaimonism a person's well being or quality of life is ultimately determined by his or her level of happiness according to this view the happier a person is the better off he is the doctrine is controversial in part because the nature of happiness is controversial in what is this thing called happiness fred feldman presents a study of the nature and value of happiness part one contains critical discussions of the main philosophical and psychological theories of happiness feldman presents arguments designed to show that each of these theories is problematic part two contains his presentation and defense of his own theory of happiness which is a form of attitudinal hedonism on this view a person's level of happiness may be identified with the extent to which he or she takes pleasure in things feldman shows that if we understand happiness as he proposes it becomes reasonable to suppose that a person's well being is determined by his or her level of happiness this view has important implications not only for moral philosophy but also for the emerging field of hedonic psychology part three contains discussions of some interactions between the proposed theory of happiness and empirical research into happiness
