Teaching in the Primary Grades 1964 excerpt from reading in the primary grades there is a sense in which the subject of reading is the most important study in the elementary school the need to teach children to read created the school so long as men learn to do and to know chiefly through their own acts spontaneous or in imitation of others the institution of apprenticeship suffices when it becomes important that youth should know what their elders have experienced the informal telling of the story is enough but when men are to be guided by poets seers and statesmen long since dead they must have recourse to the written or the printed record and the use of the wide ranges of experience that literacy allows means that the power to read must be taught by a teacher in more or less continuous contact with the child one may pick up skill by watching a workman one may learn the common speech by ordinary association with men who work and talk but one can never learn to read by looking at a book over the shoulder of the reader about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks.com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition we do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
