for agriculture there is a continuum of water storage options ranging from groundwater aquifers soil water natural wetlands and small ponds and tanks to large reservoirs in any situation each of these has its own niche in terms of technical feasibility socioeconomic sustainability and impact on public health and the environment planning storage requires insight into impending needs and also a good understanding of what already exists and what was and was not successful in the past this report provides an inventory of existing and prospective water storage in the ghanaian volta and the ethiopian blue Nile basins it provides as much quantitative data as possible but highlights both the dearth of readily available information and the lack of integrated planning of storage in both basins recommendations are made for improved planning in the future
