palliative care is a specialized form of care that provides symptom relief, comfort and support to individuals living with serious illnesses. It also provides support to caregivers and those impacted by a loved one's condition. Palliative care is specialized medical care for people living with a serious illness, such as cancer or heart failure. Patients in palliative care may receive medical care for their symptoms or palliative care along with treatment intended to cure their serious illness. Palliative care is specialized medical care that focuses on providing relief from pain and other symptoms of a serious illness. It also can help you cope with side effects from medical treatments. The availability of palliative care does not depend on whether your condition can be cured. Palliative care is a special approach to caring for anyone with serious illness, such as cancer. Palliative care focuses on improving the quality of life by helping patients and caregivers manage the symptoms of a serious illness and side effects of treatment. Palliative care is specialized medical care for people living with a serious illness. Palliative care can be received at the same time as your treatment for your disease or condition. It focuses on providing relief from the symptoms and stress of serious illness. Palliative care is explicitly recognized under the human right to health. It should be provided through person-centered and integrated health services that pay special attention to the specific needs and preferences of individuals. Palliative care is required for a wide range of diseases. Palliative care aims to prevent and relieve physical, social, emotional, spiritual, and existential distress. Palliative care also supports family caregivers during the disease journey. Palliative medicine is a whole-person care that gives you an extra layer of support so you and your family can live better. Who can get palliative care? Any adult or child can get it if they have a serious illness. Palliative care utilizes an interdisciplinary team of physicians, nurses, social workers, and chaplains to assess and manage the physical, psychological, social, and spiritual stressors associated with serious illness. A palliative care team includes a group of specialists who look at each person's situation and work together to help the patient and caregiver with various types of needs. The palliative care team can help by controlling physical symptoms and side effects, managing emotions that come with a cancer diagnosis and treatment. Palliative care is an approach to care that addresses the person as a whole, not just their disease. The goal is to prevent or treat, as early as possible, the symptoms and side effects of the disease and its treatment, in addition to any related psychological, social, and spiritual problems. Palliative care improves the quality of life for patients with a life-threatening illness and for their families. It aims to relieve suffering by identifying, assessing, and treating pain and palliative care support for patients and caregivers. If you've been diagnosed with a serious, long-lasting disease or with a life-threatening illness, palliative care can make your life better. Palliative care or supportive care is medical care that focuses on relieving the symptoms caused by serious illnesses like cancer. It can be given at any point during a person's illness to help them feel more comfortable. Palliative care is specialized medical care for those living with a severe illness. It focuses on relieving symptoms and improving a person's quality of life. It is a need-based, multidisciplinary treatment aimed at improving the quality of life and overall well-being of people with chronic, life-altering illnesses. Palliative care puts you in control of your care. Palliative care teams work closely with a patient's oncologist throughout their cancer journey. A doctor speaks to a patient in this undated stock photo. Palliative care is most often offered and started by the cancer care team who is giving your treatment. The doctors and nurses you see during your treatment visits may provide some palliative care themselves, such as helping to manage symptoms and side effects like nausea or pain. Findings in this randomized trial of 507 adults with advanced lung cancer: patients assigned to stepped palliative care had significantly fewer palliative care visits and reported QoL scores at week 24 that were noninferior (adjusted mean 100.6 vs 97.8,  $p = 0.01$ ) to the QoL scores of patients assigned to an early palliative care model. The main topics discussed were: 1. Perceptions about end of life and palliative care; 2. Difficulties in the end of life process and the needs detected; both met and unmet; 3. The demands and proposals at professional and institutional level for the resolution of these needs. See supplementary materials.
