g v desani broke his silence forty years after the appearance of his classic novel all about h hatterr with this volume of twenty three stories and one long prose poem only the second full length book of his fiction ever to be published many of the stories appeared first in literary anthologies and magazines over the past thirty years including the noble savage edited by saul bellow illustrated weekly of india transatlantic review and boston university journal the stories are mostly written in the humorous mode of his novel relying upon comic timing and his keen sense of the incongruities in contemporary life they often captivate in the same way as indres shah s sufi learning tales and the titles alone convey a sense of the interpenetration of india s cultures suta abandoned mephisto s daughter the second mrs was wed in a nightmare gypsy jim brazil to kumari kinshino country life country folk cobras thok since nation must export smithers the lama arupa whether send ups of colonialism or lampoons of conventionality there is a seriousness to desani s comedy that crosses cultural boundaries and racial identification the long prose poem hali was originally issued in 1950 adapted for the stage in london broadcast several times over bbc radio and then after being pirated three times was suppressed by the author for twenty years until this publication hali is a complementary opposite to all about h hatterr it is the writer s vision of cosmic creation and human destiny marrying hindu buddhist islamic and other indian religious traditions into a cathartic drama e m forster said of it private mythologies are dangerous devices you have succeeded wonderfully it keeps evoking heights above the summit of normal achievement where the highest aspirations reach the times literary supplement termed it haunting and the librarian declared it as near a work of genius as one can judge this is the definitive fourth edition and also the first authorized u s publication of this work a landmark of literary recovery the first major edition of an overlooked genius who in her lifetime was considered 19th century America's greatest woman writer in the eyes of her contemporaries Constance Fenimore Woolson 1840-1894 ranked with George Eliot as one of the two greatest women writers of the English language she wrote fiction of remarkable intellectual power that outsold those of her male contemporaries Henry James and William Dean Howells James enshrined memories of his long complicated friendship with Woolson in The Beast in the Jungle and The Wings of the Dove and more recently Colm Toibin treated the relationship in his novel The Master but Woolson's close association with James and her likely suicide in Venice have tended to overshadow her own literary accomplishments pigeonholing her as a martyr to the male literary establishment this volume the most comprehensive gathering of Woolson's stories to date represents the culmination of decades of recovery work done by scholars and puts the focus back on the work where it belongs set variously in the great lakes region the post civil war south and europe woolson s short stories often concern outsiders of one kind or another prophets and misfits living in remote landscapes uneducated coal miners impoverished spinsters neglected nuns a haunted caretaker of the dead destitute southerners and female artists driven to extreme behavior as they seek the admiration or approval of established male critics or writers woolson s minute realism captures both the social texture of her time and the inner emotional lives of these overlooked and marginalized characters most of all her writings startle us with their simmering intensity their sensual descriptions of the environment and refusal to smooth out the ambiguities and tensions that inevitably result from human efforts to communicate and connect her fiction is deeply human resonating with a power across the centuries that makes them remarkably modern for today s readers

The Collected Stories of Lydia Davis

Lydia Davis's stories are a collection of small, often overlooked characters and situations. Her writing is characterized by its precision and its ability to capture the inner lives of her characters. The stories are set in various locations, including the Great Lakes region, the post-Civil War South, and Europe. The characters are often outsiders, prophets, and misfits, living in remote landscapes. The stories are often concerned with the search for admiration or approval from established male critics or writers. Woolson's minute realism captures both the social texture of her time and the inner emotional lives of these overlooked and marginalized characters. Most of all, her writings startle us with their simmering intensity, their sensual descriptions of the environment, and their refusal to smooth out the ambiguities and tensions that inevitably result from human efforts to communicate and connect. Her fiction is deeply human, resonating with a power across the centuries that makes them remarkably modern for today's readers.
