The health information management journal HIMJ is the official peer reviewed research journal of the health information management association of Australia HIMAA providing a forum for the dissemination of original research. The journal continues its transformation toward health informatics big data and analytics while traditional competencies such as coding are waning as computer assisted coding moves to the forefront.

Health information management HIM is information management applied to health and health care. It is the practice of analyzing and protecting digital and traditional medical information vital to providing quality patient care. The main gaps and challenges to an effective pandemic response related to health information management and health informatics are: 1. Lack of standards for information exchange between providers and 2. Problems in building trust through development and implementation of health information management and thereby contribute to raising the quality of healthcare.

The Japan Society of Health Information Management (JHIM) was established in 1975 as the Japan Society of Health Information Management. Health information management is the process of inputting, managing, protecting, and analyzing health care data like electronic health records, lab results, patient contact information, medical history, and more. This information is highly sensitive data that needs to be stored safely and securely while easily accessible.

This chapter introduces the health information management profession, describing the current and evolving roles of HIM professionals as the digital transformation continues to disrupt and advance the healthcare industry. Health informatics and patient-centric approaches have been focused on three areas over the last decade: 1. Disease management and epidemiology, 2. Technology for data mining and machine learning, and 3. Health services such as personal health devices and electronic health records.

Health information management HIM is the practice of acquiring, analyzing, and protecting digital and traditional medical information vital to providing quality patient care. It is a combination of business science and information technology.
