Language Teacher Education 1979 essay from the year 2016 in the subject didactics for the subject english grammar style working technique misurata university school of education course english language teaching language english abstract there has been much debate in the last 20 years about the most effective way of acquiring grammatical structures of a second language the so called inductive approach has benefited students in terms of mastering rules and learning about different structures in the context of efl university students in libya the so called inductive approach has proved to be successful in making students practice the language inside the classroom but not outside it it is clear that students are encouraged to be accurate rather than fluent my main argument is that the instructions provided by the inductive approach are still not able to reflect effectively the natural learning environment this might be the result of teaching grammar outside the context i will argue for that teaching grammar through context is quite critical in helping students perform more naturally outside the classroom even though communicative activities are randomly selected of yaoundé 1 faculty of education language english abstract this work set out to investigate english language teaching in general teacher training colleges gttcs with focus on strategies that can enhance trainees oral competences in the teaching of oral aspects of english during micro teaching and beyond the study was motivated by our observation that pronunciation is hardly taught in primary schools in the francophone sub system of education in cameroon it was hypothesized that the initial training received by french speaking student teachers in government bilingual teacher training gbttc college nlongkak does not equip them with adequate skills to teach english pronunciation activities effectively the data for this qualitative study was collected through lesson observation and document analysis the typical sampling method was applied in order to come up with the sample population this population consisted of trainers and trainees of gbttc yaounde nlongkak the data collected were analysed following the content analysis method and against the back drop of the research questions that guided the study the following findings were obtained first the frequency of lessons on english pronunciation pedagogy was not the same in all classes second schemes of work found in most logbooks studied pay little attention to the oral aspects of english third methods and techniques that trainers used to teach english pronunciation pedagogy were not informed by current methodologies in pronunciation pedagogy fourth it was revealed that most trainees taught very few lessons in the domain of oral language fifth most of the trainees had difficulties preparing lessons on english pronunciation according to the exigencies of the competence based approach sixth all student teachers showed no mastery of the subject matter and the teaching of the oral domain of english language during micro teaching these findings imply that the input received by trainees does not build their competences in teaching activities of the domain of oral language it is therefore suggested that initial training of teacher trainers at gttc should be revisited school administrators policymakers trainers and trainees should reconsider the importance of teaching activities of the domain of oral language and the building of trainees and trainers competences
