Occupational Safety and Health Law 2018

Safety, security, health and environment law challenges the standard approach to occupational health and safety, instead proposing a reconsideration of safety risks in an integrated matrix that includes security and environmental risks. It sets out the common grounding in risk management that underlies the methodology of practice in safety, security, health and environment (SSE) areas and the similarity in the legislative treatment by all jurisdictions in Australia. Chapters cover general duties, personal liability and frameworks for SSE management and enforcement, plus a chapter devoted to security law, major hazard facilities and security plans, ports, airports and security requirements, emergency preparedness and security and anti-terrorism laws as they apply to business.
