Rethinking Educational Leadership

2009-07-29

john west burnham offers a radical critique of prevailing models of leadership in education particularly models of school leadership notably the british view of headship for almost a generation school leadership has been focused on the concept of improvement within a policy context of improvement and a prevailing culture rooted in incremental adjustment rather than a fundamental reappraisal transformation is a particularly evocative concept it is one of those words that it is almost impossible to raise objections to however as is so often the case with such words its power is often proportionate to the ambiguity with which it is used in the context of a discussion about transforming schools three broad categories of usage might be identified transformation as improved performance transformation as the achievement of optimum effectiveness and transformation as profound change it is in this latter respect that the book will offer an alternative model of leadership transformation is not about improving output or efficiency it is not about incremental improvement or optimising organizational effectiveness transformation is rather about the profound change of every component of the organization following a fundamental reconceptualisation of its purpose and nature transformation is a process that ensures that an organization is appropriate to the context in which it operates transformation is about questioning the very nature of the school as an organization and the nature of organizations the distinctive nature of this book is that it will focus on leadership attitudes values and personal qualities the elusive and intangible elements of leadership rather than simply reworking the traditional blend of knowledge skills and experience central to the book will be the notion of the personal mind map the model of leadership that determines personal behaviour the book will focus on helping leaders review and reconceptualise their personal mindscapes the book will have a strongly practical focus and is designed to be a resource for school leaders who find that their work is increasingly moving beyond

Rethinking Period Boundaries

2022-03-21

periodisation is an ever present feature of the grammar of history writing as with all grammatical rules the order it imposes can both liberate and stifle though few historians would consider their period boundaries as anything more than useful guidelines heuristic artifice all too easily congeals into immovable structure blinkering the historical gaze researchers of literature are of course challenged by similar dilemmas here too the neatness of periodisation can obscure the cultural output of awkward individuals that do not fit the right chronological corset whilst also creating unfounded expectations of shared experience and expression rather than discard periodisation altogether in this cross disciplinary volume an international group of historians and literary scholars presents different ways in which accepted period boundaries in modern european history can be challenged and rethought to do so they explore unnoticed continuities and instances of delayed cultural transfer that defy easy periodisation adopt the perspective of social groups that standard periodisation schemes have ignored and consider how historical actors themselves divide up history and how this can affect their actions
