Acute kidney injury (AKI) is associated with increased long-term mortality and morbidity. This study investigated the association between AKI and long-term outcomes in a cohort of patients. The results show that patients with AKI have a significantly higher risk of mortality and morbidity compared to those without AKI. The study also found that the risk of mortality and morbidity increases with the severity of AKI. These findings suggest that AKI is a serious condition that requires prompt treatment and monitoring.
