This book seeks to advance our understanding of the relationship between information and human values by synthesizing the complementary but typically disconnected threads in the literature. Reflecting on my 15 years of research on the relationship between information and human values, this book advances our intellectual understanding of the key facets of this topic and encourages further research to continue exploring this important and timely research topic. The book begins with an explanation of what human values are and why they are important. Next, three distinct literatures on values, information, and technology are analyzed and synthesized, including the social psychology literature on human values, the information studies literature on the core values of librarianship, and the human-computer interaction literature on value-sensitive design. After that, three detailed case studies are presented based on reflections on a wide range of research studies. The first case study focuses on the role of human values in the design and use of educational simulations; the second case study focuses on the role of human values in the design and use of computational models; the final case study explores human values in communication via about or using information technology. The book concludes by laying out a values and design cycle for studying values in information and presenting an agenda for further research.

Becoming the Best

Examining urban heritage in twentieth-century Australia, James Lesh reveals how evolving ideas of value and significance shaped cities and places over decades. A growing number of sites and areas were found to be valuable by communities and professionals. Places perceived to have value were often conserved; places perceived to lack value became subject to modernisation, redevelopment, and renewal. From the 1970s, alongside strengthened activism and legislation with the innovative Burra Charter (1979), the values-based model emerged for managing the aesthetic, historic, scientific, and social significance of historic environments. Values thus transitioned from an implicit to an overt component of urban architectural and planning conservation. The field of conservation became a noted profession and discipline. Conservation also had a broader role in celebrating the Australian nation and in reconciling settler colonialism for the twentieth century, integrating urban history and heritage studies. This book provides the first longitudinal study of the twentieth-century Australian heritage movement. It advocates for innovative and reflexive modes of heritage practice responsive to urban social and environmental imperatives as the values-based model continues to shape conservation worldwide. This book is an essential reference for researchers, students, and practitioners concerned with the past and future of cities and heritage. Foreword and Chapter 1.
