Cities and Regions in the New Europe 1992

this book explores the impact of localities and regions on universities and shows how the diversity of the higher education landscape is critically affected by the geophysical character of regions and their differentiated economies and cultures regional inequalities bear heavily on universities strategy making a study of the interrelationship between higher and further education argues that from a regional perspective a change to a tertiary education system in england following wales would create the conditions for better local and regional coordination universities make a significant contribution to levelling up through technology transfer and the creation of innovation hubs but the contribution of locally or regionally based students who on graduation return to disadvantaged communities rather than seek employment elsewhere should be recognised also as a longer term step to redressing regional inequality the book argues strongly that the time has come to decentralise the governance of a re aligned tertiary system to regions and identifies the move to create metro mayors and combined authorities as providing the appropriate vehicle to release new initiative from regional sources it cites the success of decentralisation to scotland and wales as offering relevant models for scrutiny the authors draw on 12 uk widely differentiated university case studies a survey of further education and a study of three continental european comparators germany ireland and norway to develop the argument the theory and practice of modeling cities and regions as complex self organizing systems presenting widely used cellular automata based models theoretical discussions and applications cities and regions grow or occasionally decline and continuously transform themselves as they do so this book describes the theory and practice of modeling the spatial dynamics of urban growth and transformation as cities are complex adaptive self organizing systems the most appropriate modeling framework is one based on the theory of self organizing systems an approach already used in such fields as physics and ecology the book presents a series of models most of them developed using cellular automata ca which are inherently spatial and computationally efficient it also provides discussions of the theoretical methodological and philosophical issues that arise from the models a case study illustrates the use of these models in urban and regional planning finally the book presents a new dynamic theory of urban spatial structure that emerges from the models and their applications the models are primarily land use models but the more advanced ones also show the dynamics of population and economic activities and are integrated with models in other domains such as economics demography and transportation the result is a rich and realistic representation of the spatial dynamics of a variety of urban phenomena the book is unique in its coverage of both the general issues associated with complex self organizing systems and the specifics of designing and implementing models of such systems the aim of this book is to consider theoretically the notion of the global competitiveness of regions as well as giving attention as to how such competitiveness may be empirically measured with this in mind the book has three specific objectives first to place the concept of regional competitiveness within the context of regional economic development theory second to present a rationale and method for quantifying the global competitiveness of regions and third to undertake the most geographically widespread analysis of regional competitiveness differences across the globe with regard to the third goal the analysis incorporates more than 500 regions across europe north and south america asia pacific the middle east and the so called bric economies of brazil russia india and china the importance of the concept of competitiveness has increased rapidly in recent years with the issues surrounding it becoming at the same time more empirically refined and theoretically complex the focus on regions reflects the growing consensus that they are the primary spatial units that compete to attract investment and it is at the regional level that knowledge is circulated and transferred resulting in agglomerations or clusters of industrial and service sector enterprises this growing acknowledgement of the region s role as a key spatial unit of organisation has led to attention turning to competitiveness at a more regional level the book explores the results of the world competitiveness index of regions wcir covering the rankings and results of the 2014 edition the wcir provides a tool for analysing the development of a range of regional economies across the globe it enables an illustration of the changing patterns of regional competitiveness on the international stage to be generated in fundamental terms the wcir aims to produce an integrated and overall benchmark of the knowledge capacity capability and sustainability of each region and the extent to which this knowledge is translated into economic value and transferred into the wealth of the citizens of each region is europe witnessing the death of the once mighty nation state if it is then two of the most powerful factors in its post war decline have been european integration and regionalism both challenge the nation state s monopoly of authority one from above the other from below although it is increasingly recognized that the two are connected this book provides a definitive examination of the new patterns of politics and policy that link the three levels of european union nation state and region looking at each member state in turn the authors emphasize the diversity of the european experience european integration has differing impacts on different regions in some it is seen as a threat centralizing power and increasing their peripherality to others it is an opportunity to by pass national governments and assert their personality the authors are sceptical of the europe of the regions scenario in which nation states fade away in favour of the other two levels but they do show how the maastricht commitment to subsidiarity together with the twin forces of european integration and regional assertion are profoundly changing the politics of europe as it moves into the twenty first century what kind of regionalism seeks to explore the value basis of regionalism in two northern european regions by investigating two less favoured politically defined regions the author tries to complement previous accounts of regionalism in western europe many of which have revolved either around ethnic regions known for hosting sub nationalist demands or around affluent regions in the economic and political centre of europe a fundamental assumption in the study is that regionalism can be studied as an instance of a political ideology the author has compared the political debate in norrbotten sweden and mecklenburg western pomerania germany from the mid 1990s up to the present bringing out the norms values and demands on which regionalism in these two regions rests drawing on extensive empirical material from the two regions the author seeks to challenge any notion that modern day forms of regionalism differ from previous ones in an absence of ethno culturalist elements the author adopts a critical approach towards treating regional identities cultures and images primarily as desirable factors for regional economic growth this volume describes real and mental regions as the historical undertone that destined a changing europe during the last millennium over the centuries historiography in many different forms became an important vehicle by which to create articulate and express the existence awareness and characteristics of europe s regions be it the histories of noble families that were important stakeholders in a region urban histories describing the developing urban networks through which regions could function dynastic histories emphasizing the relationship between ruler and region or hagiographies describing holy men and women and their veneration as focal points within regions all of them represented and reflected identities within an understood spatial and or mental sphere historiography can therefore help us to understand the way in which regions were seen from within and from without and to understand the patterns and dynamics of regional cohesion moreover it sheds light on the dialectic between nation and region and on the relationship between the regional sphere and the wider inter national sphere the authors of this volume look at individual european regions from different points of view using historiography as a lens they analyse the ways in which history as a construct has played a role in establishing regional identity providing examples of the ways in which recording interpreting and recounting the history of regions through the ages has been instrumental in shaping these regions the first section of the volume explores regional identity in medieval and early modern historiography the second shows how in the age of the invention and triumph of the european nation state the long nineteenth century historiography of a new kind was applied for a deliberate creation of regional identity or at least reflected the need for a historical confirmation of identities
