murder has always held a particular fascination for us but since at least the nineteenth century we have seen the murderer as different from the ordinary citizen a special individual like an artist or a genius who exists apart from the moral majority a sovereign self who obeys only the destructive urge sometimes even commanding cult followings in contemporary culture we continue to believe that there is something different and exceptional about killers but is the murderer such a distinctive type are they degenerate beasts or supermen as they have been depicted on the page and the screen or are murderers something else entirely in the subject of murder lisa downing explores the ways in which the figure of the murderer has been made to signify a specific kind of social subject in western modernity drawing on the work of foucault in her studies of the lives and crimes of killers in europe and the united states downing interrogates the meanings of media and texts produced about and by murderers upending the usual treatment of murderers as isolated figures or exceptional individuals downing argues that they are ordinary people reflections of our society at the intersections of gender agency desire and violence please note this is a companion version not the original book sample book insights 1 on august 6 1888 london was a carnival of wondrous things to do for as little as pennies if one could spare a few the bells of windsor s parish church and st george s chapel rang all day ships were dressed in flags 2 walter sickert was a master of greasepaint and wardrobe he was able to completely transform himself into someone else and he was known for his bizarre hairstyles and clothing 3 sickert was a graphomaniac and he would write so many articles for newspapers and journals that he would apologize to whoever he submitted them to he would seek out major celebrities of the day and would even spy on them 4 it is believed that sickert was in london in the summer and fall of 1888 when the ripper began his bloody crimes however this is not true he could not have murdered anyone if he were someplace else philip l simpson provides an original and broad overview of the evolving serial killer genre in the two media most responsible for its popularity literature and cinema of the 1980s and 1990s the fictional serial killer with a motiveless highly individualized modus operandi is the latest manifestation of the multiple murderers and homicidal maniacs that haunt american literature and particularly visual media such as cinema and television simpson theorizes that the serial killer genre results from a combination of earlier genre depictions of multiple murderers inherited gothic storytelling conventions and threatening folkloric figures reworked over the years into a contemporary mythology of violence updated and repackaged for mass consumption the gothic villains the monsters the vampires and the werewolves of the past have evolved into the fictional serial killer who clearly reflects american cultural anxieties at the start of the twenty first century citing numerous sources simpson argues that serial killers recent popularity as genre monsters owes much to their pliability to any number of authorial ideological agendas from both the left and the right ends of the political spectrum serial killers in fiction are a kind of debased and traumatized visionary whose murders privately and publicly re empower them with a pseudo divine aura in the contemporary political moment the current fascination with serial killer narratives can thus be explained as the latest manifestation of the ongoing human fascination with tales of gruesome murders and mythic villains finding a receptive audience in a nation galvanized by the increasingly apocalyptic tension between the extremist philosophies of both the new right and the anti new right faced with a blizzard of works of varying quality dealing with the serial killer simpson has ruled out the catalog approach in this study in favor of in depth an analysis of the best american work in the genre he has chosen novels and films that have at least some degree of public name recognition or notoriety including red dragon and the silence of the lambs by thomas harris manhunter directed by michael mann henry portrait of a serial killer directed by john mcnaughton seven directed by david fincher natural born killers directed by oliver stone zombie by joyce carol oates and american psycho
