Ten Things Every Child with Autism Wishes You Knew 2005 noah is not like most children he doesn't like doing things that are loud or fast he is happy just doing his own thing so let's follow noah and see what he likes to do this picture book is a warming story of acceptance that some of us are different and like to do different things while the book was specifically written to raise awareness of autism from the point of view of a young child as it avoids labels it can be used to help open up a discussion with any young child about what it means to be different written by a hands on grandmother of a young child called noah who has autism the goal of this book is to increase acceptance of autistic behaviour by showing that it is unnecessary to try to force children with autism to do what everyone else is doing the reasons a child with autism may not want to do the same things as their peers can be complex but include being overwhelmed by sensory input in the story we see that noah is happy doing his own thing and in fact later discover that other kids in the park have actually been following and copying him all along because noah's interests intrigued them thus the purpose of the book is to raise awareness and understanding of autism among children particularly in schools so that they are more accepting of autistic behaviour as with all of its books the publisher your stories matter aims to help people know they are not alone with what makes them different if a young person or adult can relate to a story it gives them hope and encourages them to share their concerns the publisher aims to provide free teaching resources for all of its books that can be used in schools to help improve understanding and celebrate differences
